ISO 37001 Anti-bribery Management Systems

Mitigate bribery risk and maintain customer confidence

Your challenges

Bribery has long been perceived as a major obstacle for socio-economic development, distorting national and international economic relations and eroding public trust. Its harmful nature can distort competition, increase the costs of products and services, and negatively impact quality. Consequently, if an organisation fails to put adequate anti-bribery measures in place, it can pose a substantial threat to both financial stability and market reputation. To minimise the risk of bribery, organisations need to design and implement an anti-corruption mechanism which follows global best practice.

What is ISO 37001?

The ISO 37001 standard specifies a series of measures for organisations to prevent, detect and address bribery. Its preventative focus helps businesses mitigate the risk of bribery throughout their own operations and across value chains. The standard promotes a culture of transparency and integrity, and the expansion of effective measures to prevent and tackle problems related to bribery. ISO 37001 can be integrated with other ISO management systems, such as ISO 9001, ISO 14001 and ISO 45001.

Why is ISO 37001 important for your business?

ISO 37001 acts as an effective tool to help organisations combat bribery risk, and maintain customer trust and confidence in their product and service offerings in today's competitive global market. Your stakeholders can be assured that that your organisation has implemented internationally recognised best practices for anti-bribery controls, and they can have confidence in the integrity of your internal processes.

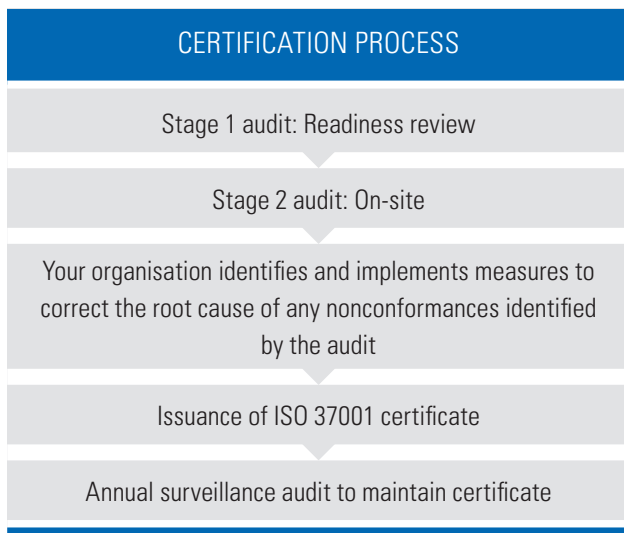

How can we help you?

An internationally accredited Certification Body, TÜV SÜD provides the expertise and experience to assess your organisation's anti-corruption programme against ISO 37001 requirements.

Before the certification audit takes place, the management system must be implemented, and its effectiveness documented against compliance requirements.

TÜV SÜD facilitates an efficient process for organisations which are approaching the ISO 37001 certification process.
